Cardiff, Wales. Welsh museum of natural history, arts, and antiquities.

The museum was based upon collections of the Cardiff althorium and mechanics' institute founded about 1850 which were transferred later to the Cardiff literary and philosophic institute (discontinued 1935).

In 1928 the Free library committee of the Cardiff corporation applied for the collection, and it was placed under its care.

In 1927 the Cardiff naturalists' society was founded, having as its main purpose the development of the museum; it continued to have charge of it until 1929 when control was taken over by the Cardiff corporation, the society continuing, however, to have a close connection with the museum.

Cardiff, Wales. Welsh museum of natural history, arts, and antiquities. (Card 2)

Up to 1911 the name of the museum appears not to have been authoritatively defined; it was known as Cardiff museum, Cardiff museum and art gallery, Public museum and art gallery, Corporation museum and art gallery. In 1901 the name Welsh museum of natural history, arts, and antiquities was adopted, though it was still referred to as Cardiff museum, Cardiff municipal museum, or Welsh museum.

On November 15, 1912, the museum was formally transferred to the National museum of Wales (chartered 1907), its collections being known in the new museum as "The Cardiff collection".

A note written at Jerusalem in 1759 by Carlier's traveling companion, Hans Jacob Breuning von Buchenbach, and attached to Carlier's manuscript, caused it to be mistaken for and wrongly described as Breuning's account of the voyage in the old manuscript catalogue of the fonds français. It remained unnoticed and later was entered under Breuning in Röhricht's Bibliotheca geographica Palaestinae (1896) p. 204.
